

The Reel west newsletter

It was a lazy morning. Kevin cooked bacon and eggs. Once we were all ready we decided to visit their son Patrick's place in Boulder.

On the way we passed this rather unique building. It looks like a satellite dish for SETI, but it's just the roof of the building.

Once in Boulder we walked over to Pearle St. This is about 4-5 blocks of city street, closed to traffic and turned into a mall with a lot of shops.

Day 20
Wednesday
April 20th

*A day with Kevin
And Thea*

Weather
High Temp: 58+
Low Temp: TBD
Conditions: sunny

We visited
Peppercorn.
Everything kitchen.
This is a display just for Bacon items.

We stopped for a drink at a Lazy Dog Saloon. I asked for Bailey's, they said sure, and gave me Ryan's. Needless to say I brought the discrepancy to their attention and did not have to pay for my drink.

The skies had cleared a little and there was a better shot of the mountains.

Below is one of two of Patrick's indoor soccer facilities, and there is a third on its way. Very nice venue for soccer, if you like that sort of thing. LOL

Kevin and I then visited the Colorado National Golf Club, home to the University of Colorado Buffaloes, for a quick 9 holes of golf. As for the postage stamp in the photo below....I will take Kevin's description of 5 shots of fireball in 9 holes as a reason.

We finished the day with dinner at the Irish Pub above. Food was pretty good, dessert was different. I believe it was a blueberry bread pudding, and a first for me.

Well, tomorrow is the last day. In the morning I head east towards home. Kevin and Thea invite everyone to visit at any time they want (you asked for it guys).

It will pretty much be a straight drive through, with the exception of the Archway in Kearney, Nebraska. If any of you remember my Utah / Monument Valley trip, the Archway was just closing when I arrived and I didn't get more than a quick look inside. This time will be different.

Good Night,

Ace
