

In Search of El dorado

A daily journal of my travels and adventures in my.....Search for Eldorado

Hello to Family & Friends

Sunday, March 14th 2021 Day 56

Semis come and go, but the RV stays the same. I decided to just stay put for the day and avoid any possible wind infractions. They upped the gusts to 65 mph. It was actually a good thing that daylight savings switched back and I lost an hour. It made the day go much faster. I spent a few hours researching the trails in Guadalupe and Carlsbad Caverns NP's, setting the GPS coordinates for overnight parking, visitor center hours, and so forth. I think I have a decent plan. Then I went for a walk to the station and walked every aisle to just check things out and stretch my legs. Ate lunch. Watched a movie. Went for another walk and took the pictures below. Watched another movie. Cooked and ate dinner. Wrote this lengthy newsletter.

I'm not sure you can really call them mountains, they are probably only 1000 feet high or so, but they are a little rugged and much better than being able to see for miles to each horizon without a bump in the landscape.

This is a pretty busy gas station, with both cars and trucks. There must be at least a hundred truck parking spots which mostly fill up overnight. The price is not too bad, $3.29 for diesel. I paid $3.19 yesterday and that was forty cents cheaper than anybody else. Usually Pilot is about fifty to sixty cents more than a normal station.

I have a unique sight to check out tomorrow and I just may get the drone in the air too. After that I will make my way to El Paso. I still have to find a truck wash, laundromat and grocery store to stop at on Tuesday.

Sorry today couldn't have been more exciting, but every job has a little down time to deal with.

Until next time.....
